The launch of Singapore's Green Plan 2030 (Green Plan) in February this year is likely to mark a turning point for the island state's energy sector. As Singapore looks to create a more sustainable society, it will become increasingly focused on low-carbon energy, including hydrogen. In this article we consider some of the key aspects of the Green Plan, from an energy perspective, and take a look at some of the initiatives in the hydrogen sector which are currently being undertaken in Singapore.
